

Who Are the Future Leaders?

The Future Leaders is a group of construction professionals that meet to exchange ideas and grow relationships to bring together all elements of the industry – general contractors, specialty contractors, architects, engineers, and associated businesses and organizations – to improve communications and build a more united construction industry.

This forum functions as a place for young professionals to network and receive support. At the same time, it aids the industry by highlighting its future leaders, supporters, and voice.

"Being a part of the Future Leaders of AGC is a great way to network with young professionals that are related to the construction industry. It is great to get together with peers who face some of the same challenges in their careers & to be able to discuss various opportunities & to build relationships within this industry. The Future Leaders provides a fun opportunity with a variety of events throughout the year that allows you to meet other people from different aspects of the construction industry & learn a little bit about what they do."

Brian Jans, Vice President,
Jans Corporation

"Joining the AGC Future Leaders Program is an excellent way to increase your awareness of different facets of the industry. Oftentimes young professionals are fully concentrated on their particular project or role within their own company, and this group helps us to get a feel for different aspects of the business and meet a more diverse group of people in our industry. The group offers those who participate an introduction to the AGC and an opportunity to learn from the collective experience of its members and partners."
