

ANTITRUST POLICY STATEMENT

Trade associations play a crucial role in fostering the exchange of information among members, encouraging both competition and innovation and contributing to overall economic efficiency. This conference aims to facilitate valuable insights, improve business practices, and enhance client service for all participants.

AGC of America has always required all its activities to comply with federal and state antitrust laws. In conducting this meeting, AGC insists that you avoid disclosing any non-public information that could have the effect of reducing competition among your companies.

It is always unlawful for competitors to reach any agreement or understanding related to pricing, market division, or business denial to any third parties.

In both fact and appearance, each of your firms must continue to exercise independent business judgment (1) in pricing your work and in setting contract terms or conditions you will offer your clients that affect price, (2) in determining the markets in which you will compete and (3) in determining the suppliers, subcontractors, and clients with which you will deal.

Meeting participants should also exercise caution when sharing non-public information about or related to business plans or company-specific details on pricing, wages, costs, or outputs. To the extent feasible, please confine your discussion to historical information and to aggregated data that does not reveal anything about any one company.
