Terry L. Salazar's law practice has focused on construction law and government contracting issues. He has represented contractors and subcontractors in all phases of the construction contracting process on private and public works projects.

Terry graduated with a B.A. degree from the University of Notre Dame in 1976 and earned a J.D. degree from the University of Texas School of Law in 1979. He is a former procurement law attorney in the Office of General Counsel, National Security Agency, and is an active member of the Public Contract Law Section of the American Bar Association. He is also affiliated with the Construction Law Section of the State Bar of Texas and the Dallas Bar Association. In 1999, Terry was the chairman of the Dallas Bar Association's Construction Law Section.

He was previously Senior Vice-President and General Counsel for a large international construction firm. He was a founding member of the MBE/WBE Committee of TEXO (formerly AGC's Dallas Chapter) and a former chairman of the City of Dallas Building Code Advisory and Appeals Board. Terry is a frequent lecturer on construction contract provisions, disputes and claims, and other construction-related topics, and has served as an instructor for both AGC of America and various chapters of the AGC.
